Jassy Jews Rise Against Axis Troops

"REVOLT SMOTHERED IN BLOOD," SAYS ROME REPORT.

A popular rising against Rumanian and German troops at Jassy, in the Rumanian province of Moldavia, about ten miles from the Pruth River, is described by the Fascist writer Curzio Malaparte in a dispatch published July 5 by the Corriere della Sera, of Rome, according to a report telephoned to the New York Times.

The attempt, Signor Malaparte says, began June 27 and it took the Axis troops three full days to smash it. It spread from one quarter to another as Soviet planes flew overhead and dropped hundreds of bombs.

House-to-house fighting, in which the Rumanian townspeople participated, were reported. The correspondent makes it clear that most of the people of Jassy rose against the Germans and he states that Jewish settlers, who "formed 60 per cent of the population," took part.

"Order has finally been re-established in Jassy," Signor Malaparte writes. "The gendarmes are on the street crossings with their rifles at the ready and look around as if they expected to be shot in the back at any moment. Platoons of Rumanian soldiers march on the sidewalks that are covered with glass fragments.

"On house walls are pasted notices by the Jassy military command, warning the population that all persons, except children, found in houses from which snipers were shooting at German or Rumanian soldiers would be shot on capture."

The writer then gives his conception of the town.

"Jassy is a typically Levantine and Jewish city," he says. "What [illegible] proletariat that is corrupted and dejected owing to the most appalling economic and moral poverty.

"One has only to go in the poor quarters in the Nicolina, Socola and Bacurari Streets to become aware of the social danger represented by the Jewish proletariat. It is in fact from the miserable dens of those quarters that the first shots against the soldiers were heard.

"Isolated gunshots were heard on Friday (June 27) in the Nicolina quarters, where the repair shops of the railroads are located. The previous day the city had been mercilessly bombed by the Soviets. On Friday nine air-raid alarms made the population nervous.

"During Saturday the isolated shots extended to the Socola and Bacurari quarters and became more frequent after sunset. At the same time rumors spread of the presence of Soviet fifth columnists in the suburbs of the city.

"About 10 o'clock at night machine-gun and rifle fire cracked through the city. It was dark and one could not see three feet away. The rebels were firing from houses and cellar windows.

"The Rumanian population in the labor districts aided the soldiers in assailing the houses of the rebels. The revolt was smothered in blood.

"The desperate battle which the Soviet fifth column had unleashed to aid the counter-attacks of the Reds, launched on the Pruth front, ten miles from Jassy, was definitely lost.

"On Sunday, June 29, the police and the troops succeeded in surrounding the quarters where the rebels were. Shots from the pi-

Many In Tears As Refugee Children Arrive

There were tearful scenes in New York, when refugee children, ranging from eight to fifteen years old, were met by friends and relatives. The children came from Germany, Austria, Poland and Czechoslovakia. They were assembled by welfare organizations at Marseilles and transportation was paid for with funds provided by the United States Committee for the Care of European Children, Inc.

Many of the children were nearing their sixteenth birthdays and had been afraid of being placed in German concentration camps had they remained in Nazi-occupied territories. All of them wore tags around their necks directing that in case of emergency the American Friends Service Committee office in Marseilles or Philadelphia should be notified and stating that telephone or wireless charges would be refunded to the sender.

A passenger on the Portuguese liner which brought the children was Dr. Robert Serebrenik, 39, who has been the Grand Rabbi of the Duchy of Luxembourg for thirteen years. He told reporters that he was in the U.S. on a visit, and with a chuckle he identified himself as probably the only Jew who had been on the Nazi payroll for the last year.

He explained that some weeks after Luxembourg was invaded,

Refugee Service Helps Biscuit Firm To Immigrate

Like hundreds of other European products, the authentic Carlsbader Oblaten have "immigrated" to the United States and are being made by the original secret recipe in New York City by the Trans-Atlantic Biscuit Company, Inc. The delicate, delicious wafers with vanilla fillings, chocolate, and cheese fillings, are finding their way into shops all over the country. They are sold now in 15 states—not in all states only because the makers haven't had time to travel about and place them yet.

The Trans-Atlantic Biscuit Company is owned by two men whose widely divergent lives were brought together in escape from the Nazi regime. They are Karl Korter and Fred Tollaen.

Karl Korter was a journalist in Prague. His American career actually had its beginning just before the World's Fair in New York, when a visiting American business executive was impressed by Korter's ability to express himself in English, and suggested that he cover the Fair for the Prague papers. He was eager to do it, but learned that the money he would earn would be very little and his expenses very big in New York. He decided to learn some sort of trade so that if necessary he could make extra income.

Mr. Korter had long known the family owning the famous Carlsbader Oblaten recipe. They agreed to teach him the secret and allow him to bring on his trip a small hand machine for its manufacture. It took six months to learn the expert art of oblaten making. Soon after his arrival in America the Munich pact was signed. During the crisis Mr. Korter was employed to assist H. V. Kaltenborn in interpreting the situation. When it was over he knew he could not return to Prague.

It also meant the end of his journalistic career, for the field here is quite different from abroad. When he turned to the manufacture of oblaten he found a

Noted Producer Rose From Poverty

Won Pulitzer Prize Three Times

Sam H. Harris, one of the most successful theatrical producers in the history of Broadway, first in partnership with George M. Cohan and then in his own right, died in his apartment in the Ritz Tower Hotel in New York. Weakened by an appendicitis operation he underwent in Florida in March, he succumbed to pneumonia, which set in on Wednesday. He was 69 years old.

Three times the Pulitzer Prize went to productions that he sponsored—"Ice bound," in 1923; "Of Thee I Sing," in 1932, and "You Can't Take It With You," in 1937. His production of "Of Mice and Men" won the New York Drama Critics Circle plaque in 1938.

Outside his office he was held in high regard, personally and professionally. His private charities were manifold. His word was his bond, the saying went on Broadway.

The American Who's Who says of Mr. Harris that at the age of 11, he was "thrown on own resources." He was born in New York at the corner of Hester and Bayard Streets, where his father owned a tailor shop. At the age of 15 he got out for himself, ran errands and sold cough drops with prize packages. Then he worked for a concern that supplied towels to office buildings, made a dollar an order, and got up little companies of actors out of jobs for Christmas shows.

Mr. Harris, who upon receiving the Penn Athletic Club's medal for distinguished service in 1936 was pronounced "the greatest living theatrical manager," knew the stage well and knew the business part of the profession from beginning to end. His first theatrical job was at Miner's on the Bowery. [illegible] the age of 22 owned six stock houses. When he entered four of them in a seven-horse race, so the story goes, they finished fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh.

Born in New York in Feb. 3, 1872, the son of Max and Sara Harris, he started his career as a manager on the East Side in the pugilistic field. When he was 17 he organized holiday entertainments and managed athletic enterprises. He promoted prize fighters, and in 1900, when Terry McGovern was

U.S. Congressman Asks Halt To Raising Of Race Issue In House

CITES LOOSE TALK GIVING IMPRESSION JEWS COMPRISE "WAR CROWD"

Charging that "the ugly issue of racial and religious bigotry has been injected in recent months into the proceedings of this body" Representative Leon Sacks, Democrat, of Philadelphia, called upon the U.S. Congress to "halt this perfidious practice."

Although he did not refer by name to any of his colleagues in the House, Sacks made reference to recent statements attributed in the Congressional Record to Representative Robert P. Lambertson, (R.) Kansas, and Representative John E. Rankin (D.) Mississippi. The latter's attack upon Jews drew dramatic Nation-wide attention when Representative Michael Edelstein, (D.) New York, dropped dead outside the chamber after replying to Rankin.

The full text of Congressman Sack's speech follows:

Mr. Speaker, Members of the House:

Regardless of political considerations and party affiliations the House of Representatives is a body composed of men and women, who above all, are Americans.

And that description carries with it the assumption that, as Americans, we all believe in Truth, Freedom of Conscience, and Equal Justice — principles upon which this Nation was founded.

I was, therefore, shocked beyond words when not so long ago assertions were made affecting individuals in my District and in my city of Philadelphia. Within the confines of our Congressional Record remarks were made the nature of which, in effect, strike at the very fundamentals of our Government. I may say that this is not the first time that the ugly issue of racial and religious bigotry has been injected in recent months into the proceedings of this body.

I feel that the time is past when vague, unsupported charges and misleading innuendo can be permitted to emanate from this floor unchallenged.

After all, this is the Congress of the United States, the hall of a deliberative and legislative body representative of the people of this Republic — one of the few remaining free parliaments in the world whose members can without duress carry out the purposes, duties and functions which they were created under our Constitution to perform.

If we are to permit on this floor remarks unbecoming the dignity of our position in the councils of Nations . . .

If we are to permit the record of our proceedings to degenerate into an organ for the dissemination of scurrility and defamation . . .

Then I say — even apart from more serious implications of the specific incidents which I call to your attention today — I say our standard of conduct reflects poorly upon the intelligence and character of the self-governing people who have honored us by election to this Congress.

Furthermore, the practice raises the question of abuse of the long-standing privilege of extension of

DEATHS

Funeral service for L/AC Jack Kugelmass, R.C.A.F., was held July 9th at the Chapel Paperman and Sons, Inc. L/AC Kugelmass was instantly killed on Tuesday, July 1st, when the plane in which he was flying with an instructor crashed in Saskatchewan. The service was conducted by Rabbi S. G. Levi, chaplain of the Canadian army, and by Rabbi Isaac Weinblatt. The pall-bearers were six of L/AC Kugelmass' associates in the R.C.A.F. L/AC Kugelmass, who joined the airforce last October, was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Kugelmass, 4081 Esplanada Avenue. Educated at Baron Byng High School, he was one of a family of twelve, and is survived by his parents, four brothers, B. S., David, Hervey; and seven sisters, Mrs. Max Weiser, Mrs. M. J. Laxer, Mrs. L. Cons, Mrs. M. Rubin, Misses Pearl, Ettye and Thelma Kugelmass. He took one year in pharmacy at McGill University after graduating from Baron Byng in 1938, and enlisted in the R.C.A.F. in August last year. Col. Samuel Echenberg represented M.D.4.

Nathan Goldenzweig died on July 7th. He was the husband of Fannie Solomon; father of Tillie, Mrs. M. I. Golt, Jack, Eve, and Mrs. I. Levitt, and also leaves six grandchildren. Funeral was from his home, 3444 Decarie Boulevard.

Samuel Bilsky, of Ottawa, brother of the late Mrs. A. J. Freiman, and a well-known figure in sports, died suddenly at his home, 118 Driveway, Ottawa, on Tuesday, July 1st. Mr. Bilsky, who was 63, had been in ailing health. Last January, while in New York, he suffered a heart attack which confined him to the hospital for two months. The day he died he went for a drive with his cousin, Mrs. M. Davidson, and shortly after returning home suffered the seizure which proved fatal. Mr. Bilsky was born in Ottawa and educated at the public schools and at Lisgar Collegiate. He was a member of Adath Jeshuron Congregation. Shortly after leaving school, Mr. Bilsky entered business, and although for many years he was widely travelled and well known as a manufacturer's representative, he was perhaps best known in the sporting world. He promoted and managed the old Emmett Lacrosse team, and had been on the executive of the Capital Hockey team. His interest was on the amateur side and there is practically no amateur sporting league in the capital that does not boast a trophy cup he donated. Surviving are four brothers, David and Alex, of New York, Jack, of Louisville, Kentucky; and Nathan Bilsky, of Ottawa; and four sisters, Mrs. A. W. Jacobs and Mrs. Allan Bronfman, of Montreal; Mrs. A. J. Shragge, of Timmins, Ontario, and Miss Eva Bilsky, of Ottawa.

Ruth Says:

"The new show on the Normandie Roof of the Mount Royal Hotel presents Jaye Martin who introduces for the first time in Canada a song which he wrote and dedicated to the soldiers of the British Army called 'The Legionnaire'. It is a real pleasure to hear him sing this stirring song in his excellent baritone voice. Clarrissa, known as a 'little bit of Latin lightning' presents a very colorful spectacle as she dances the chiapanecas, a Mexican folk dance, in peasant costume. Clarrissa comes to the Normandie Roof from Nassau where she performed for the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. Society's Favorite Dance Trio, Anthony, Allyn and Hedges, do a beautiful adagio waltz to a Strauss medley. Favorites are back. Porthole, and his gal, Parlour, touch the funny bone with their amusing banter. Porthole is wooden, but he smokes a cigarette and talks. Music is directed by Don Turner and his new theme song is a number which he introduced, called 'Under Blue Canadian Skies'."

Jewish Heroines Of Our Time

By Alfred Werner

In order to get somebody released one had to provide the prisoner—who, generally, had been imprisoned merely because of his belonging to the "damned" Jewish race — with the opportunity of leaving for some overseas country immediately after. Hitler wanted to get rid of the Jews at once, after he had made them beggars — he would have loved to send them to Madagascar altogether, as wholesale slaughter was too expensive and troublesome. It was not even enough to show an affidavit to a Gestapo-man — it could take months, if not years, if unfortunately you had been born in Poland or had registered at a late term, before you were granted a visa. A few Jewish doctors and engineers were granted Chinese visas. A number got certificates or joined "illegal" Palestine emigrations. To the majority, however, there was only one alternative: either to perish sooner or later in Nazi Germany as a prisoner or a "free" man, or to leave for Shanghai. This overcrowded danger spot in the Far East was the only place where everybody could land without any visa—you just had to get a ship ticket.

But this was the trouble. You could book only German or Italian liners—and the more tickets required, the higher the price rose—from 300 Reichsmark to 3000 Reichsmark (100 to 1000 dollars). "Enrichez-vous" — enrich yourselves on the already exhausted Jewish properties, and on the pennies of the poor—was the slogan of the Nazi business world. How they profited by the Jewish exodus! Swindlers established booking offices, charged enormous sums from desperate Jewish women who had spent their last money and had sold their poor belongings for a Shanghai ticket, for a man who was pining away in Dachau or Buchewald. But when the women showed the tickets to the Gestapo official, they turned out to be faked—and not the faker, but his victim was risking punishment for another's crime.

Many Jews were fortunate enough to be granted American visas together with their families soon after being released, so that they could try and start a new life together. Other men went for an intermediary stay to England, and their wives joined them, taking up domestic posts there. But a great number of these women had to send their imperiled husbands away to China alone, being unable to buy another ticket — and with little prospect of ever seeing them again . . .

We, the direct victims of Nazi terrorism, must never forget how we were ill-treated by the "superior" race. Nor must any American, whether Jewish or Gentile, when meeting a German emissary who is eager to assure him that the Jews in "Greater Germany" have always been as happy as doves and that whatever you may have heard otherwise was certainly exaggeration and "atrocity tales," forget that Nazism is a return to the brutal mind of a Neanderthal man. For instance, no other people would still regard woman as something much inferior to man, incapable of mental affinity with him. "Woman's place is in the kitchen, and in bed," is a Nazi slogan, meaning that woman has to prepare meals for the warrior and bear children to him—these children to be cannon fodder a few years later. Much inferior, however, to a German woman stands a Jewess. Dr. Goebbels maintains: Any German prostitute is superior to any Jewess. Can you, therefore, expect Nazis to behave like gentlemen in any respect, if they disregard paying even the courtesy due the other sex?

The medieval (or rather pagan) Nuremberg laws protected the Jewish woman at least from being raped by the victorious S. A., although some of those "warriors" molested Jewesses despite the law forbidding intercourse between the races. But the women were spared no other pains and humiliations whatsoever. Marcel William Fodor, the well-informed Vienna correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, did not exaggerate when he reported that Jewish women were "caught in the streets like cattle by cowboys and ordered to cleanse the pavements of the propaganda mottoes of the Schuschnigg plebiscite days. One could see beautiful Jewesses, in expensive clothes, kneeling in the streets and rubbing and scrubbing the stone pavement while the mob jeered at them. Others were dragged to S. A. barracks and mercilessly flogged or ordered to scrub lavatories."

Little known to the public, however, is another trick used by the Nazis both to injure the honor of the Jewish woman and to add new "material" to their "Rassenlehre" (racial philosophy). In the summer of 1939 many women of all ages were summoned to the police stations—to be photographed there absolutely naked! Besides, various measures of their bodies were taken—and all this nice labor was done by Nazi lads (students of medicine, it was explained officially). Eventually even the "Israelitische Kultusgemeinde" (Jewish representatives), though deprived by the Nazi authorities of any rights of protecting our fellow-sufferers, dared to protest against those measures, as it became known that in several cases the youths had trespassed the Nuremberg laws—not the laws of decency, which did not exist as regards Jewesses — by indecently touching their victims. As a result of the protest, a Jewish woman doctor was allowed to be present at the procedure.

I could fill a book with more stories concerning the heroism and sufferings of the Jewish women in Nazi Europe. And friends of mine who left Vienna only recently, have furnished me with moving reports about those 25,000 heroines still struggling there against famine and persecution.

Five Brothers In Canadian Uniform Reunited After Ten Years

All Are Unmarried, Too

From the Voluntary Enlistment Bureau of the Canadian Jewish Congress comes the following story. Aircraftman Maurice Oifman, R. C. A. F., now taking the special radio course at the University of Toronto, recently met his four brothers, all in the armed forces, for the first time in ten years. The five Oifman brothers, who hail from Kamsack, Saskatchewan, held a reunion in Ottawa. Since the reunion one has gone overseas and the others are stationed with their units in various parts of Canada.

The story begins almost four decades ago, when Samuel Oifman, who had served in the Russian army in the Boxer Rebellion and had received several decorations, arrived in Canada. He settled in Winnipeg, where most of the children were born, and then moved to Kamsack, where he still resides. There are eight children in the Oifman family, seven sons and a daughter. Five of the sons are serving in Canada's armed forces; the oldest, age 38, is in business with his father in Kamsack, and the youngest, is only 18 years of age.

The oldest of the five brothers on active service is Aircraftman Hyman Oifman, R.C.A.F., 33 years old, who spent several years at the University of Saskatchewan and left a position with the Army and Navy Department Store in Edmonton to enlist. Second is Captain Abraham Oifman, C.D.C., 31 years old, graduate of the University of Alberta, who left his practice in Grande Prairie, Alberta. Captain Oifman was a prominent amateur boxer and all-'round athlete in his younger days. Third comes Aircraftman Maurice Oifman, R.C.A.F., 29 years old, who had spent several years at the University of Alberta, and has been employed for the past five years in the Auditor General's Office in Ottawa. Fourth is Gunner Shea Oifman, R.C.A., 27 years old, who has been a transport driver out of Chicago for some years, and who came from the United States to enlist. Gunner Oifman is now overseas. The youngest is Leading Aircraftman Jack Oifman, R.C.A.C., who was in business with his father.

All five brothers are unmarried. It was ten years since they had all been together in the family home at Kamsack.

IN CANADA It's The Canadian Jewish Review

• THERE is no greater influence for constructive Jewish community progress than the Jewish weekly newspaper printed in English and intended for the home.

The English-Jewish weekly enters the home with faithful regularity, bringing news from abroad and from larger centres of Jewish population, as well as from the immediate community. The youngsters see it from their earliest years and come to regard it as an institution in the same sound class as synagogue and school.

The Jewish community weekly newspaper printed in their language records their births and confirmations, their scholastic triumphs, their engagements and their marriages and those of their friends. When they go away to school or to make their homes elsewhere, their parents send them the English-Jewish newspaper so that they will have news from home even when they don't receive letters.

For, what happens abroad or in the States, important as it is in the large view, takes second place to what happens within the family, the community or within some circle in it. News of the reader, his folks and friends, people he knew "when" and their children suddenly growing up over night, these are the real things that take first place in human interest.

So no medium is as well read all over as the up-to-date, modern, well-printed and conscientiously-edited English newspaper for the Jewish home. Its pass-along circulation is amazing for there must be an average of at least five readers to every copy of paid circulation. It is in effect a small town paper in the heart of a big city.

This goes on week in, week out, year after year as the paper serves the individual and the community and the community at large. For the English-Jewish weekly helps to integrate the Jews in the life of the country through the language of the land they live in and help to build up in loyalty and strength.

In Canada the paper that does this is the Canadian Jewish Review, the paper that's at home in the Jewish homes of Toronto and Montreal.

Why Children Leave Home

By Freda Minsova, Executive Secretary, Jewish Child Welfare Association of Toronto

Danny was eight years old and couldn't eat candy. Nor ice cream. Nor could he take part in treats at school. He could only look on. For Danny had diabetes. True, he was only one of many diabetic patients, but being a child made a great difference. It was much harder for him to keep away from the things most children had. It was also more difficult because of his mother, who had no patience with Danny. She screamed at him and punished him unjustly. In order to get even with her Danny would refuse to take the insulin injections and often would eat candy or ice cream or other forbidden food on purpose. This went on until one day Danny collapsed in a state of coma.

Danny was rushed to the hospital. It was found that he had a highly developed diabetic condition. Unless he was given good care and kept to a strict diet, his life would be in danger.

Danny's mother and father tried their best to do what was necessary for him. But things were against them. His father was unemployed. His mother was a bundle of nerves due to poverty, worry, and constant quarrelling. In such an atmosphere Danny would never get better. In fact, he became quite a problem. What could be done for him?

A friend advised that he should be placed in a boarding home with a foster mother who was experienced with invalids and could help to overcome Danny's problems. Such a home was secured for him by the Jewish Child Welfare Association and in a few months Danny began to improve in his health. Soon he will be well enough to lead the life of an active, normal boy. Perhaps eat ice cream and candy, too!

Would you like to offer YOUR home as a child who needs it? The board paid is $21.50 per month. If you are interested, call WA. 1877.

featherweight champion of the world, he was backed by Mr. Harris, who bet on him in the ring and put him in a melodrama called "The Bowery After Dark," which toured the country from coast to coast. One of his race horses he named Terry McGovern. It was a winner in six furlongs.

Mr. Harris said recently of the "good, old days":

"Then there was a theatre and a theatre public in every town. Now there is less heart in the theatre. And just good plays are not good enough. They have to be better than good."

On another occasion, when asked for his advice to stage-struck girls, he said that it was to "go home and wash dishes or take up typewriting. Unless a girl has courage, personality and brains she hasn't a chance. If she has all these, and will work hard — well, maybe."

Of the long list of other shows that he presented, alone or in partnership with Mr. Cohan, Max Gordon and others, the percentage of successes was all but phenomenal; and the Music Box Theatre, which he and Irving Berlin built in 1921, and which housed many of his offerings, became known as the home of hits. There and elsewhere, with occasional co-producers, he presented such shows as the Music Box revues, "Six Cylinder Love," "The Nervous Wreck," "Rain," "Captain Applejack," "Cradle Snatchers," "The Jazz Singer," "The Spider," "Chicago," "Animal Crackers," "June Moon," "Once in a Lifetime," "Dinner at Eight," "As Thousands Cheer," "Jubilee," "First Lady," "Stage Door," "I'd Rather Be Right" and "Night Must Fall," in addition to the aforementioned prize-winners.

Last Fall Mr. Harris produced "George Washington Slept Here" and early this year the enormously successful "Lady in the Dark." "The Man Who Came to Dinner" currently is at the Music Box, a holdover from the season of 1939-40.

In recent years Mr. Harris's unofficial partner had been the playwright-director, George S. Kaufman. It was a happy and greatly profitable combination, of which Moss Hart was also a member as Mr. Kaufman's chief collaborator. The three, with Mr. Gordon and Marcus Heiman, acquired the Lyceum Theatre last year.

But though Mr. Harris came to rely largely on the judgment of Mr. Kaufman and Mr. Hart, his own theatrical sagacity was as great as ever. After a show went into production he rarely concerned himself with details until the dress rehearsal. Then, as his staff admiringly noted, his eye for small faults was as sharp as of old.

A quiet, soft-spoken man, Mr. Harris was probably less well known to the public as a personality than others of comparable eminence in his field. But the public knew very well the significance of his name above the title of a play or a musical. Far more often than otherwise, it meant a hit. Not only was he wise in the ways of the stage, but he had a genius for tactful relationships with authors, directors and players.

The Cohan and Harris partnership, during which they produced fifty plays, started when the two daring men (both broke at the moment) joined forces for the conquest of Broadway. It was in the production of "Little Johnnie Jones," the musical piece which brought the talented Cohan to Broadway and in which was sung one of the most famous of all Cohan songs, "Give My Regards to Broadway."

Mr. Harris once revealed how his friendship with "George M." started.

"George," he recollected, "was looking for 'somebody to buy in on a sure thing' and was told that 'a little fellow by the name of Harris would take a chance.'

"We went to a picnic of the Words and Music Club over on Staten Island, where there was a ball game. Patsy Rooney forgot the baseballs, so we had to play with apples. George was pitcher, I was catcher. On the way back on the ferryboat we shook hands. And that was all the contract there ever was between Cohan & Harris."

Mr. Harris was married twice. His first wife was Alice Nolan, who died in November, 1920. She had made her stage debut in 1904 and had appeared in many Cohan and Harris productions. She had two sisters, Lola and Agnes, who appeared under the stage name of Merrill, and of whom the latter was married to Mr. Cohan. In 1939 Mr. Harris married Mrs. Kathleen Watson. Other survivors are two sisters, Mrs. Ray Jones and Miss Bessie Harris, both of Brooklyn.

remarks in the Congressional Record which we now unanimously enjoy by reason of unanimous consent. At a critical hour in history, under the pressure of soul-stirring events from which statesmen are struggling to rescue the remnants of our civilization, it is hardly a contribution to the welfare of the United States to adopt the methods which have caused the downfall of other Nations.

In the heat of debate, with grave issues involved, it is conceivable that men, under stress of emotion, may say things which they later regret. But in extended remarks, prepared and written in advance for printing in the Record, with full deliberation, knowledge and responsibility for his acts, there is no excuse for any member of Congress to sponsor material of un-American nature.

In allowing such a practice the membership of this House not only stultifies itself but, what is even worse and more important, we make ourselves the pawns and dupes of an alien-fostered plot to create disunity, distrust and division in our own ranks.

It has been conclusively demonstrated, in nearly a dozen instances, and needs no elaboration here, that physical invasion of each country so far conquered by the despoiling hordes of Hitlerism was preceded by a propaganda attack, — an attack mind you, of an exact pattern of that being followed by certain people in America today.

Divide and rule has ever been the motto of conquerors and today's tyrant has adapted it to his own foreign purposes.

The diversity of its people is a source of America's strength. We must guard against its misuse by others as a weapon to be turned against us. We are the product of many races and many creeds, sprung from forbears who came from distant lands to this haven of liberty to establish a community whose essential keynote is brotherhood. Under democracy and civil liberties men and women of every religion, race and nationality in the United States have learned to live together in peace, order and mutual respect.

If this internal harmony is shattered, if this public order is upset . . . if group is set against group — then America also would be headed for destruction.

Certain stock canards are being revived and circulated against Americans of Jewish faith. The falsity of these various accusations has been completely established and repeatedly exposed by impartial non-Jewish authority as they have cropped up from time to time in recent years. The fact that their charges have proven untrue has not, however, deterred the purveyors of such propaganda from continuing assiduously to spread it.

Facts never do deter them.

Constant repitition, not authenticity, is the means by which the charges gain credance. Now Commu-Nazi propagandists and their co-workers, seeing this poison work in Europe, are spreading it in America.

But should the Congress of the United States give sanction to this vicious campaign? Should the Congress of the United States allow the pages of its official Record to be thus sullied? Should this Congress permit its floor to be used as a sounding-board for such utterances! Should any individual Congressman under the cloak of immunity from civil action enjoyed by reason of membership in this body, further this Commu-Nazi scheme of division by himself joining in attack upon a minority people? Should he use his public office and the prestige of his official position in the cause of subversion?

Assertions have been made concerning some American citizens living in my City. An attack was made upon Leon Levy, President of radio station WCAU, in which it was stated that WCAU had denied time on the radio to Charles A. Lindbergh.

Let us look at the facts. On May 23rd, Leon Levy, President of WCAU sent a telegram to the one who made such assertion, in which he stated that WCAU had not received a request either from the America First Committee, a representative of Lindbergh, or from anyone else officially connected with the organization, to broadcast Charles A. Lindbergh's speech of May 29th, delivered in Philadelphia, and further added that "If and when such a request is made it will be given proper consideration". In the same telegram it was also pointed out that WCAU had broadcast Lindbergh's speech from Minneapolis on Saturday, May 10, and was also to broadcast Senator Wheeler's speech of that very day, May 23rd.

This telegram was received and acknowledged by letter to Mr. Levy on May 24th, by the one who made the assertions. Yet, in spite of that fact, on May 27th, four days later, he said—and I refer to the Record of that date, "Dr. Leon Levy, President of WCAU Philadelphia denied time on the radio to Lindbergh." Can there be any excuse on the side of error in such a misstatement made with complete foreknowledge and acknowledgement of the true facts? Can there be any justification for his deliberate misstatement? Can there be any other motive attributable to such individuals than the desire to give circulation to malicious propaganda.

Once a misstatement is put into circulation it can never be overtaken and entirely refuted with all who heard or read of it. See how this particular misstatement about WCAU has spread; on June 4th more than ten days later it reappeared elsewhere.

In the same assertions made on May 27th it is alleged that Samuel B. Rosenbaum, head of WFIL, also denied Lindbergh time. I have a copy of a telegram sent by Mr. Rosenbaum on May 31 to the one who made this assertion, which states as follows, "This is not true, the fact is that instead of selling Lindbergh time, I offered him time free and he accepted it and used it and WFIL broadcast his speech on equal terms in every respect with facilities offered the other side. No doubt you will rectify the incorrect statement you made".

Privately, the one who made these assertions, admitted he was mistaken, for WFIL not only granted free time to Lindbergh's broadcast of his speech but waived the cost of wire-lines for the pick-up and gave free preliminary announcements in advance of the meeting calling attention to it.

With the inaccuracy typical of this statement, it was attempted to link the "war-crowd" to the refusal of owners of the Academy of Music to rent their hall for the Lindbergh meeting. However, it was not stated that the owners of the Academy were not Americans of Jewish faith. It was not stated at the time the assertion was made declaiming the alleged attempt to deprive the so-called America First Committee of a suitable meeting hall, that the sponsors of the meeting had already made commitment to rent the Arena, another hall in Philadelphia. It was further not stated that this hall, in which the Lindbergh meeting was held, was rented with the consent of the six owners, three of whom are Americans of Jewish faith.

This information was easily obtainable upon the slightest effort to investigate the truth of the situation. Obviously, no such effort and no investigation was made as to the true facts.

All of this, however, merely points to the larger conclusion that the maker of these assertions is guilty of loose talk, a complete lack of the sense of responsibility which devolves upon members of this House to consider any utterance they deliver in this time of National stress.

As a matter of fact, up until this day there has not been a correction before the House of the mistakes of fact which were admitted privately as mistakes, and which still stand on the official Record of proceedings; and above all, the impression has not been corrected that the "war crowd" in Philadelphia is composed of [illegible] Jewish faith, and that they were a party to a conspiracy to deny free speech to Lindbergh.

From the facts deduced from this statement today it is clearly established that their falsity is beyond answer.

I question the responsibility of any Member of this House who will not publicly acknowledge the untruth of a libel which he sponsors here. Such member is under deep obligation not only to the individuals I have mentioned, but to the country as a whole and to this House which gives him the privileges under which these statements were made, to acknowledge the false accusations made in his statement of May 27.

Mr. Speaker, I am calling this to the attention of the Congress so that the House may determine whether or not in the future a halt should be called to this perfidious practice.

Dr. Arthur A. Feldman, Rabbi

Rev. Dr. Arthur A. Feldman, rabbi of Anshe Sholom synagogue, died suddenly on July 6th about 10.45 p.m., at his home, 325 James Street South, Hamilton, Ontario, on returning from a walk. He was believed to be in his customary good health and had not mentioned any illness.

Dr. Feldman went to Hamilton in 1926 from Lafayette, Ind., to become the rabbi of Anshe Sholom congregation. During these years he had made hundreds of friends among Gentiles as well as Jews who were appreciative of his many fine qualities of heart and mind.

Arthur Aaron Feldman was born on January 19, 1888, in Galanta, Czechoslovakia, son of a distinguished family, his father being the late Rabbi Moses Feldman, whose father was also a rabbi. At the University of Vienna Dr. Feldman received the degree doctor of philosophy and then went to Berlin for further research work, finally gaining his rabbinical diploma in the city of Budapest. On coming to America in 1923 he attended the Hebrew Union college in Cincinnati for post-graduate work. He had been a rabbi in Pancova, Hungary, and in Budapest before coming to America.

Generally considered as one of the most intellectual and deep-thinking Jewish scholars on this side of the Atlantic, Dr. Feldman specialized for many years in interpreting the Old Testament from the psychological point of view. He had contributed to many papers and periodicals, including journals of psychology, the Hamilton Spectator, and the Canadian Jewish Review, from which articles were reprinted in other countries, and at the time of his passing had a book in manuscript form, entitled, Origin of Customs.

Dr. Feldman was one of the organizers of the Council of Churches in Hamilton and was the first person to address it. He took an active part in all community affairs and was a member of the Council of Jewish Organizations since its inception, also of the Bnai Brith Lodge, the Central Conference of American Rabbis, and the Canadian Club, and was on the board of the Children's Aid Society and the Big Brothers' Association. Dr. Feldman was a frequent and popular visitor at the Mountain sanatorium.

One of his chief studies and interests was psychoanalysis and he had been a great friend of the world-famous psychologist and scientist, Professor Freud. His favourite recreations were walking and rowing and in his younger days swimming.

Surviving are his wife, the former Kathleen Forgacs; his mother, Mrs. Josephine Feldman, in Budapest; five brothers, David and Phillip, in Pittsburgh, Pa., Dr. Alexander Feldman, of New York, two others in Hungary, one of whom is a physician; and three sisters, two in Hungary and one in Jugoslavia.

REFUGEE SERVICE HELPS BISCUIT FIRM TO IMMIGRATE

ready market but the cost of producing the wafers was excessive. In Kitsap girls sat all day for a few pennies turning them out by hand. Even the cost of labor far over-balanced the quantity produced. Another trouble was the difference in flour and sugar, and variations caused by the climate.

About this time Mr. Korter met Fred Tollsen. Mr. Tollsen had owned and operated the Klatt plant, a biscuit and wafer factory in Vienna. When he was forced out of the business, he got his papers in order to leave the country. At the French border he was taken from the train to the Gestapo headquarters — whence he emerged some hours later with two broken ribs, a smashed nose, and 40 cigarette burns on his body. Because it was the policy not to release a man who has been injured by them, he was kept in a concentration camp until he recovered.

On the boat to America, Ambassador Wilson was also a passenger. When he heard that Tollsen had just left a camp he talked with him for a long time. Later Ambassador Wilson recommended the young man to a flour broker through whom he got his first job in a wafer factory. Accidentally he learned of Karl Korter and the manufacture of oblaten through the Trade Winds Shop. The two men met — and the Trans-Atlantic Biscuit Company was formed.

First there were months of experiment. Carlsbader Oblaten had always been made with a special Hungarian flour. The gluten and starch content of American flour was quite different — and results were quite different too. The recipe called for beet sugar. The cane sugar available here also produced different results. So many hours had to be spent in grinding and testing and blending various American flours and sugars. Finally they were successful — they found the right American ingredients and made identical Carlsbader Oblaten.

The next difficulty was the little hand machine — something like a waffle iron — on which they could turn out only a small quantity. Together they invented an automatic machine — which with subsequent improvements turns out the wafers from start to finish at tremendous speed.

With the aid of the National Refugee Service, which is represented together with the Joint Distribution Committee and the United Palestine Appeal in the United Jewish Appeal, the Trans-Atlantic began business. They have steadily expanded from a small kitchen to a large, light factory floor. Messrs. Korter and Tollsen have been able to add other secret recipes to their line. One fine wafer they make exclusively is used in medical supplies; and another is used by bakeries as a base for cookies, Halvah, etc.

The Trans-Atlantic Biscuit Company, Inc. has brought a new product and a new enterprise to American shores. It contributes its own bit in employment and in the cycle of production and consumption in the American market.

toons of execution squads echoed until late at night throughout the city."

All Jews between 15 and 55 years old have been evacuated from villages along the Pruth River, it was reported at Bucharest, Rumania. It was said that the Jews were in the service of the Soviet Union and acted as spies.

Many Jews caught on espionage charges have been executed on the spot. Several others attempted to damage telephone and telegraph lines. Most of the Jews were described as soldiers or customs officers.

Jews permitted to remain in the region are obliged to wear a yellow stripe on their sleeves.

The Military Tribunal of Constanta has sentenced to death the Communist Arbu, who, with his accomplices, tried to light up the city during an air-raid. Four persons employed in a Constanta electric power plant aided in the plot. Two of them were sentenced to twenty years and two to fifteen years at hard labor.

the Germans set up a civil government, and ordered that all civil jobs held by Jews must be turned over to Aryans. Dr. Serebrenik's post is on the civil lists, by Napoleonic law, and he explained to the Germans that an Aryan could hardly replace him. The case was so puzzling that the Nazi conquerors never got around to solving it, and the Grand Rabbi's salary went on.

Of the 110 were child refugees. The parents of several died in German concentration camps and many children left parents behind in such camps.

Nine of the children, were held for further examination on Ellis Island. In one case a consul had made an error in a visa, but in most cases the children were ill, suffering with mild fevers and skin irritations requiring treatment and diagnosis. As the other children were escorted from the ship the dreamed youngsters, with their round identification tags suspended on dresses and coats, wept inconsolably and refused to accept the assurances of the welfare workers that they would soon be out. They thought they were going to some new kind of punishment.

Thirteen-year-old Paul Weiss of Belgium, who was standing near by, said: "I have a great joy to know I am in America. But I cannot forget that my mother is in Gurs." Gurs is a concentration camp in France.

The children were assembled in Marseilles principally from homes maintained by the O.S.E., a health organization. The great task of maintaining them and getting them through to Lisbon was aided in by the American Friends Society and the American Joint Distribution Committee.

During the voyage from Lisbon the children were cared for by Dr. Isaac Chomski, a Polish refugee, and his wife. Dr. Chomski said that he could not sufficiently praise the officers and "every member of this ship's crew" for their constant attention and kindness to the child refugees during the voyage. Many of the children had come on board suffering from malnutrition and nervousness, and the stewards and others of the Mouzinho's crew had taken special pains with all of them, he said. He added that the food was excellent on the voyage.

Dr. Chomski and others on the ship told how the child refugees came to Lisbon like a group of "tired old men and women, their faces gray and pinched and their spirits dulled." Gradually they began to brighten and take an interest in their surroundings, and by the time the ship docked yesterday they were beginning to laugh again. Dr. Chomski said the first few days of feeding had to be done cautiously, because of stomach conditions caused by bad feeding and physical suffering.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without censor
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

American Jewish leaders met in New York for what information sent to the Review calls an "extraordinary" executive conference summoning Jewish communities to provide the utmost in aid. They reviewed the results of the first six months of the $25,000,000 war emergency campaign in behalf of the Joint Distribution Committee, the United Palestine Appeal and the National Refugee Service to the effect that the programs of relief, rescue, resettlement and rehabilitation had kept pace with critical world developments and had met new emergencies threatening the existence of Jews under fire and in distress. This meant food, clothing and shelter for hundreds of thousands of Jews in Nazi Poland and relief to Jews in Greater Germany and German-controlled areas without aiding the German economy; also help to the Jewish community of Palestine as the war spread through the Middle East; also retraining, employment, direct relief, and resettlement plans for refugees arriving in the United States.

Nothing that has been planned can be curtailed. On the contrary, facing forward, Jewish leaders see that the needs of the United Jewish Appeal may be greatly enlarged as a result of the struggle between Germany and Russia. There are already five millions of Jews caught in Nazi-dominated countries. To these there may be added another five millions. American Jewry, which its leaders call the "arsenal of hope" for millions of Jews in other parts of the world, hopes to be prepared to face any eventuality. Its leaders see this moment as a turning point at which American Jews must prepare themselves to meet greater responsibilities in the immediate future. In other words, the quota of $25,000,000 must be met quickly because after that there will be fresh demands which cannot be refused.

All this pressure of tragedy, which it is up to the Jews on the American continent to view with responsibility for some alleviation, takes the breath away. It has come with such high tempo and rapid pace, with so much dislocation and turbulence that the shock is felt thousands of miles away by people who are staggered at the mere enormity of the whole thing. One week five millions in jeopardy who must be helped, the next week ten millions, constitutes for the Jews on the American continent a danger of a subtle and intangible kind, and that is the human incapability of grasping the full meaning of tragedy on such a scale.

It was easier at first when the Jews of the world, charmed by the snake, rallied quickly from their horror and set about to help the ancient community of their people in Germany. They could see the calamity that had befallen the German Jews in terms of what it was doing to families, their demotion, their loss of friendships and means of livelihood, their great grief over loved ones brutally treated and devilishly murdered.

It is safe to say that, as the blackness seeped into Austria and Czechoslovakia and farther, millions of Jews the world over were unable to sleep or to go about their daily work except in the dwelling consciousness, sometimes vague, sometimes insistent, of a burden of terror, agony, and unhappiness so heavy that one continent could not hold it out of the air of another, so thick that it affected the emotional strength of people across the seas in safe places. Add to that the reduction of the Polish Jewish community to a walled-off space where people die in ghastly ways and so little news seeps through the crevices of the mortuary that silence attacks the imagination of the outside world with the probe of dread.

The spiritual and emotional weight of the appalling accumulation of terrible happenings has the fateful effect of inuring even sensitive people to tragedy and the recital of wrongs and abuses, for it is not possible to maintain endlessly the same level of humane response. The same people who were outraged and filled with pity in 1933 may seem habituated today to the way horrors pile up. What they are experiencing is a defensive hardening, perhaps the kind of thing that nature invents to save sanity. Many don't want to know or hear any more than they have already heard about the state of a world in flames. They want to forget or be lulled. They are willing to give the Nazis the benefit of any doubt about superiority in the dark depths which depravity and sinister cruelty can plumb.

But people must not succumb to the assault on the emotions so entirely that a state of apathy becomes chronic. Just as the dread lifts and is replaced by a numbness and imperviousness as a rest period, so must dispassion and indisturbance give way again to the interest and sensitiveness which normal people feel over the plight of others in great distress of whatever kind. Not for the sake of quotas, for they will be filled with the necessary money, but for the health and morale of the Jewish group the lethargy that comes from being fed up with hearing inores must be dispelled. The channels of sympathy and interest must be kept open and people must continue to read and speak of the things that hapnen and may happen.

At the very beginning, a German-Jewish leader said to an American: "Don't let us be cut off from you. Don't lose touch." This plea is even more pathetic now than it was then for it is the composite call of many Jewries. It must be reheard with timbre of human voice to create psychological nearness and to fight off distance. For without interest, concern and loyalty of feeling, there cannot be the world-wide morale which must be maintained. t.f.c.

Social Work Maintains Home Front As Part Of National Defense

By Martin M. Cohn, Of Toronto, Executive Director Of The United Jewish Welfare Fund

A conference on Social Welfare brings together people who are concerned with every aspect of human behavior, both individual and communal. In this respect, the two recent conferences held at Atlantic City — the 68th National Conference on Social Work, and the National Conference of Jewish Social Welfare — followed the tradition of many other similar gatherings. To these conferences came social case workers, community organizers, psychiatrists, group workers, state administrators of relief and social security programs, community leaders and others. This year, they came with the added experiences of the past year in mobilization for defense, in increased industrial activity, and in the reactions of individuals called upon to make increasing sacrifices.

At the Jewish Conference, there was a stocktaking in terms of the upheaval caused by the temporary breakdown in the United Jewish Appeal. A plea for mutual understanding between national and overseas welfare agencies on the one hand, and local Jewish communities throughout the country on the other hand was made by William J. Shroder, Chairman of the Board of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds.

The chief source of friction between the national organizations seeking funds throughout the country, and the local communities, was the tendency on the part of many of the former, Mr. Shroder stated, to disregard recognized local bodies and to make their appeals directly to individual members of the community. The National Agencies give two reasons for following this procedure, said Mr. Shroder. First, an agency has the right to function in any community where it can sell itself to a group sufficiently influential to ensure financial backing; any other position would retard development of their programs. Second, local organizations do not represent every Jew in the city, and any community organization claiming to act for its community is usurping a power it does not and cannot possess. In answer to these points, Mr. Shroder pointed out it must be remembered that community organization is not a matter of theory, but of fact.

If a community recognizes an organization, a welfare fund, or a community council, as its representative, supports its positions and follows its recommendations, no philosophical or theoretical demonstration, however perfect, can prevent it from being the instrument through which the local community expresses its will. Mr. Shroder added that local communities were often at fault too, in that they refused to meet the national organizations half way.

Declaring that the difficulties depicted by Mr. Shroder were only "the surface indications of the perfectly national and inevitable struggle of a once united people seeking to adjust themselves to new and changing conditions", Morris D. Waldman, Secretary of the American Jewish Committee, envisioned a possible solution along the lines of the Board of Deputies of British Jews. He stressed the importance of the Community Council as a harbinger of the future form and structure of local community organization. The Community Council is a natural growth like the Welfare Fund before it, and the Federation before the Welfare Fund.

The Federation movement reflected the state of development of community life in which local philanthropy was the paramount interest. The Welfare Funds which have been established in the last fifteen years reflected a broadening interest — the wider community interest in, and sense of responsibility for, extra-local activities. The Community Council reflects a still wider development of the communal outlook concerning all matters, local as well as national, domestic as well as overseas, affecting Jewish life. Mr. Waldman felt that we could look forward to the day when Community Councils will become firmly established throughout the country, as a means of bringing about a closer and more effective relation between the local communities and national organizations.

To those at the Conference who were interested in the social welfare agencies of their communities, and in giving a greater degree of service to the people who look to them for help, Kurt Peiser, Executive Director of the Philadelphia Federation of Jewish Charities, stated that mergers of social welfare institutions should be undertaken only when they advance the interest of their communities, and offer a higher grade of service to the individuals they serve. "Mergers are not a panacea", Mr. Peiser said. "They are far from a perfect solution to our communal ills. They are merely one more mechanism in sound communal planning, designed to improve service to clients and advance the interests of the community at large."

There were many sessions on the problems of national defense in the United States, which are closely allied to the problems of our own war effort. Stating that social workers, by their positions as key-men in every community in the country, could be of invaluable aid to the national defense program, President Henry Monsky, of Bnai Brith, and Frank L. Weil, of the Jewish Welfare Board, called upon the eight hundred delegates to the National Conference of Jewish Social Welfare, to register themselves and their organizations solidly behind President Roosevelt in the present emergency.

The question of the place of social work in the national defense picture permeated all sessions at the conferences. This was reflected not only in the talks by Mr. Monsky and Mr. Weil, but also in sessions such as "Social Services and Defense", "Social Security and the Defense of the Nation", "Casework and National Defense", and others. Here there was great emphasis on the need for maintaining the "Home front", and not sacrificing the social services at a time when they are more necessary than ever, if a nation's defense program, or war effort, is to reach its greatest possible development.
